FRA's Forestry Guide for Non Foresters in the Southeast

in layman's language: what foresters do and why they do it

The Forest Resources Association's 61-page booklet provides foresters and loggers with an information resource to present to private landowners, journalists, and other members of the public, as a means of orienting them about the science and practice of forestry in the Southeastern United States. The Forestry Guide for Non Foresters in the Southeast presents the history of forest use in the region, provides background on forest types and tree species, and outlines ecological and wildlife management issues, while providing basics on mensuration and surveying. Sources for more information and an extensive glossary of terms are also included.
